

LECTURE 1:

EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE

This lecture focused on Emotional Intelligence and how emotions affect personal behaviour, communication, teamwork, leadership, and professional development. I learned that emotions are a normal part of human life, but managing them properly is very important in academic and workplace situations.

Emotional intelligence helps a person understand their own emotions, control reactions, understand other people's feelings, and build positive relationships. This lecture also explained the difference between IQ and EQ and showed why emotional intelligence is important for success.

WHAT I UNDERSTOOD

I understood that emotional intelligence means understanding my own emotions and controlling them in a good way. It also helps me understand other people's feelings and respond respectfully.

A person with good emotional intelligence can stay calm, listen to others, communicate well, and solve problems without arguments.

MAIN THINGS I LEARNED

- Emotions
- Emotional Intelligence
- IQ and EQ
- Self-awareness
- Self-regulation
- Motivation
- Empathy
- Social skills
- Leadership

HOW I CAN APPLY IT

I can use emotional intelligence in group projects, presentations, viva, interviews, and future workplace situations.

In group work, I can listen to my team members, respect their ideas, and control my emotions. During viva or interviews, I can stay calm and answer confidently.

MY SELF-REFLECTION

Before this lecture, I thought success mainly depends on technical skills and subject knowledge.

After this lecture, I understood that emotional intelligence is also very important for personal and professional success.

This lesson helped me understand that I should improve my patience, confidence, self-control, communication, and empathy.

As a Software Engineering student, I need emotional intelligence to work better with others, manage stress, and behave professionally.

CONCLUSION

Emotional intelligence is an important professional skill. It helps me understand emotions, communicate better, work with others, and handle difficult situations calmly.

This lesson will help me in my studies, group projects, interviews, viva, and future workplace.
